The gauges shown here report the tightness test results for each machine in the lottery. The tightness test measures the behavior of the machine. Machines reading on the left of the gauge are "tight" and indicate that players should use "cold" numbers. Machines reading on the right of the gauge are "loose" and indicate that players should use "hot" numbers.

A lotto uses a single machine filled with anywhere from 20–80 numbered balls. Depending on the format of the lotto, a set of balls (typically 5 or 6) is drawn from this single machine.

A bonus lotto is similar to a lotto but uses two machines instead of just one. As in a lotto, the first machine has a field of 20–80 balls and multiple balls are drawn from this machine. The second machine in a bonus lotto holds the second field of balls from which a single ball is drawn.
